

INFORMATION ON THE AUTHORS

YUKA ANDO received her Master's degree in communication at the University of South Alabama. She taught Japanese at the University of Hawai'i at Manoa and Ruhr University Bochum and is currently teaching at the University of Duisburg-Essen. Her current research focuses on the acquisition of the particle "ni" among adult learners of Japanese.

TESSA CARROLL was formerly lecturer in Japanese at the University of Stirling until the department's closure in 2005, since when she has worked mainly as a freelance researcher, editor and writer. Research interests include language planning in Japan and elsewhere, JFL, and honorific language.

GERHARD DILLMANN teaches Japanese and studies Japanese language teaching at the Institute of Intensive Language Training, Japonicum, at the Ruhr University Bochum. Research interests include Japanese language teaching, teaching German as a foreign language, general language acquisition, pragmatics and contrastive linguistics.

VIKTORIA ESCHBACH-SZABO studied German, Slavic, Chinese and Japanese at Eötvös Loránd University Budapest and Ruhr University Bochum. In 1990 she was appointed professor of Japanese Studies at Trier University; since 1992 she is professor of Japanese linguistics at Tübingen University. She is the current President of the European Association for Japanese Studies. Research interests include discourse and cognitive studies, history of Japanese linguistics and lexicology.

SAU KUEN FAN received her first degree from the Chinese University of Hong Kong and her PhD from Monash University, Australia. She is currently a professor at Kanda University of International Studies in Japan. Her research interests include sociolinguistics, intercultural communication and second language acquisition. She is conducting a research project on language management among multilanguage users in Japan.

CHRISTIAN GALAN teaches Japanese studies at the Toulouse-le Mirail University and conducts research at the French Centre of Japanese Studies (CEJ, INALCO) in Paris. Research interests include the history of pedagogy, Japanese language teaching and the history of thought of the Meiji period. He is the co-founder of Daruma, an international journal on Japanese studies.

PATRICK HEINRICH studies and teaches Japanese language and culture at the University of Duisburg-Essen. Research interests include history of linguistics, language ideology and sociolinguistics. He is currently working on a monograph on language choices in the Ryukyu Islands.

JIRÍ V. NEUSTUPNÝ has worked on and contributed to general linguistic theory as well as to linguistics in Japanese contexts. In the first field, his work on language planning in particular has been influential; in the latter, his research on JFL is well known. He has studied and taught at various universities in Europe, Australia and Japan, and has published extensively for more than four decades.

ROMAN SCHORR studies Japanese Sociolinguistics at the University of Duisburg-Essen and teaches Japanese as a Foreign Language at Heinrich-Heine University Düsseldorf. He is currently writing his MA thesis on contact situations.

AYAKO SHIKAMA has worked on a research project on Japan's nascent multilingual society at the University of Duisburg-Essen from 2001 to 2006. She currently works for the German Institute for Japanese Studies in Tokyo.

IRINA A. SHPORT holds a BA in Russian Language and Literature and an MA degree in Japanese Language and Pedagogy. She is currently working on her PhD in linguistics with a focus on second language acquisition of Japanese prosody at the University of Oregon. Her research interests include speech production and perception, acoustic phonetics in its application to second language acquisition, phonetics and phonology of prosody in typologically different (stress and tone) languages.

BERNARD SPOLSKY is Professor Emeritus at Bar Ilan University. Before joining Bar Ilan University he taught in New Zealand, Australia, the US and Europe. Spolsky is the founding editor of the journal Language Policy and is currently writing a book on language management.

YUKO SUGITA is a research associate for Japanese Language and Culture at the University of Duisburg-Essen. Her research field includes interactional linguistics and sociology of language. Her current research project focuses on issues how ongoing economic and social changes in Japan influence language behaviour of especially male Japanese.

KEIKO YOSHIOKA teaches Japanese language and Second Language Acquisition at the Department of Japanese and Korean Studies at Leiden University. Her research interests include information structure in narrative discourse, co-speech gesture and the acquisition of second language by adult learners.